

Plant Botanical Name:

Cercis canadensis

USBG Plant Location:

Bartholdi Park
National Garden

The showy, magenta-pink bloom of the redbud tree is a familiar sign of spring's arrival. A smaller tree, often found in the understory and edges of forests, reaches heights from 15 to 30 feet. The Eastern redbud can often be identified by its bright-green, cordate (heart-shaped) leaves. Native Americans often used the Eastern redbud and enjoyed tea made from its bark.

National Garden Room Location:

Regional Garden

Source URL: <https://m.usbg.gov/plants/eastern-redbud>