

The U.S. Botanic Garden (USBG) presents a new exhibit Garden

May 24 through October 1, 2019. The exhibit showcases 21 public gardens from across the United States through vignettes created by each garden that illustrate the gardens' stories. The displays were chosen from a call for entries to all gardens across the country. It corresponds to the USBG co-hosting the American Public Gardens Association in Washington, D.C. this June when almost 1,000 members of the public garden community will convene. The displays are located throughout the outdoor gardens and range in size and scope from educational displays to large 25 x 25' displays with plants, props, and sculpture.

Educational displays range from showcasing Fort Worth Botanic Garden's begonia collection and begonia mascot used in children's education outreach to Pittsburgh Botanic Garden is cleaning mine water and creating new gardens. Displays feature iconic plants such as cactus and agaves in Tucson Botanic Garden to carnivorous pitcher plants in Atlanta Botanical Garden's bog garden display to native pollinator plants in the State Botanic Garden of Georgia's display. Displays are found throughout including a school bus (Bookworm Gardens), flamingo and butterfly topiaries (Franklin Park Conservatory and Botanical Gardens), and a honeycomb (Smithsonian Gardens).

"This exhibit spotlights the diversity and beauty of the more than 600 public gardens in the United States," said Saharah Moon Chapotin, U.S. Botanic Garden. "Public gardens serve many important roles - no matter if they are recently created or long established, hundreds of acres or just a few. They educate about native plants of their area, protect and conserve rare and endangered plants, and serve as modern oases and community gathering places."
